A Modern Monte Cristo.
The Union Pacific overland train a few weeks ago had a passenger on board named Edward Harrison, a well-known California millionaire, whose history, as related by himself to a Bee representative, is a most romantic one, and in a degree equals that of Duma's famous hero, Edmund Dantes. The reporter was given a "tip" by a sable porter that a passenger of more than ordinary interest was seated in the smoking compartment of the rear car and the gentleman was sought out. Mr. Harrison, for that was his name, is a fine looking man, forty-one years of age. He wears a full beard, slightly tinged with gray, and is a pronounced brunette. During the wait at the depot and the ride to Council Bluffs he related his story, which substantially is as follows:

Mr. Harrison is the son of a New York tailor doing business at No. 422 Fourth avenue, New York. In 1865, when eighteen years of age, he ran away from home and made his way to New Orleans. He found nearly all industries paralyzed from the effects of the war and for self maintenance was obliged to seek employment on the sugar plantation of Pierre Goeze. Here he remained for four years, and by practicing the strictest economy was enabled to save $800. In 1870 Mr. Harrison decided to go to California and in the spring of that year reached Sacramento. Here he became acquainted with a man named James Lawson, with whom he entered into partnership and the commission house of Harrison & Lawson was established. Both put in an equal amount of money, but after five months of the firm's existence Mr. Harrison discovered that Lawson was systematically robbing him and insisted that the partnership be dissolved. After several stormy scenes between the two men the dissolution was effected and each one began business under his own name. The rivalry existing between the two men was the subject of much concern among the people of Sacramento, and it was the openly expressed opinion of many that the feud would end in bloodshed. Both men were hot tempered, and on many occasions expressed their hatred for each other in unguarded and violent terms. In fact, Mr. Harrison was known to have said that he would "fix Lawson forever" if opportunity was ever offered. One night about seven months after the dissolution of the firm of Harrison & Lawson the latter was shot and instantly killed immediately in front of Mr. Harrison's place of business. Mr. Harrison was writing letters at his desk when the shot was fired. He grabbed up a pistol that lay before him and rushed to the sidewalk. There he found a prostrate form, but ere he could discover its identity the police came up and placed Harrison under arrest. Next morning he was lodged in the county jail to await trial on the charge of murder.

At the next term of the Criminal Court Mr. Harrison was tried for the murder of James Lawson. The best legal talent in the State was employed by the defense. The chain of circumstantial evidence was so strong that anything short of conviction was impossible, and Mr. Harrison was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged. It was proved that Lawson and Harrison were deadly enemies, that the latter had made threats against the former's life, that he was found standing over the murdered man with a pistol in his hand from which one shot had been fired, and that the bullet found in Lawson's body was of the same calibre as those remaining in Harrison's weapon.

Mr. Harrison's attorneys immediately filed a motion for a new trial on the ground of having discovered new and important evidence. After several days' argument their client was granted a new trial. Harrison's lawyers then set up a novel defense, and by a number of witnesses showed that their client was a somnambulist and that he had been known to discharge firearms before while in a trance. It was shown that he had remained up all night previous to the murder and had complained of great fatigue during the day. The jury was out five days and then brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. While this was clearly in violation of the evidence and law, Mr. Harrison's attorneys counseled their client to abide by it. They evidently considered him guilty and thought he was getting off very easily.

The unfortunate man was sentenced to the penitentiary for eighteen years. During the nine years that followed he became acquainted with a fellow-convict named William Padlock, sentenced to life for the murder of a miner. Finally, in the year 1882, Harrison was pardoned and released from imprisonment, his innocence being established by the death bed confession of a man named Eaton, who stated that he killed Lawson for the purpose of robbery, but the appearance of Harrison on the scene with a pistol in his hand prevented him from removing the murdered man's valuables. Before he left the prison he was accorded an interview with Padlock, who told him of certain rich gold deposits in Idaho known only to him. This information was given to Mr. Harrison only with the understanding that if he found the statement to be true he should use every effort to secure Padlock's pardon and give him a certain percentage of the value of the find.

Mr. Harrison was greatly impressed with the truth of Padlock's revelation, and after securing what little money he possessed started at once for Idaho. Following the instructions of Padlock he finally struck paying ore in what is now known as the Coeur d'Alene mines. Mr. Harrison engaged the co-operation of a wealthy gentleman in San Francisco and bought up a large tract of the land, which he afterwards sold at fabulous rates, making himself immensely rich.

Mr. Harrison did not forget the convict Padlock, but used every effort to effect his release and succeeded. Almost the last official act of the late Gov. Barrett, of California, was the signing of Padlock's pardon. Mr. Harrison is now en route to New York to visit his aged parents, whom he has not seen for twenty two years.—Omaha Bee.
